RECEPTION. SECOND

Three Thousand Books Donated the Rosemary Library.

IT WILL BE CONTINUED ANOTHER DAY.

The Committee Authorized to Insure the Books-All Contributors Registered as Members of the Association.

The second book reception at the Rosemary Library yesterday and last evening was as great a success as on the previous day.

All day and up to 10 o'clock at night books were being constantly received at the library. The school-children of Mrs. A. B. Camm's presented the library with thirty volumes yes. terday morning, and have promised to give a large number more.

The donations yesterday were large and dandsome. Notably, a magnificent volume of Stormouth's dictionary with supporter, donated by Mr. and Mrs. John Addison. The total number of volumes received vesterday amounted to about five hundred. The total receipts of books is about three thousand.

Few things show the moral advancement of a people more plainly than the degree to which the tyranny of the strong over the weak is frowned upon. There were ancient and barbarous times in which this sentiment had never been awakened. Might alone was supposed to make right, the strong oppressed the weak as a matter of course, and the weak supposed to make right, the strong oppressed the weak as a matter of course, and the weak never thought of anything but submitting. Gradually, however, better views prevailed, and now the best people in civilized lands scorn to employ their strength to tyrannize over their weaker neighbors. The public conscience is becoming more and more aroused to the injustice of this, and while there are not many sterms to take, the general tenaroused to the injustice of this, and while there are yet many steps to take, the general tendency is in the right direction. There is, however, frequently another tyranny, more insidious, and perhaps hardly less selfish, but which excites far less comment, i. e., the tyranny of the weak over the strong. It might be supposed that where power of any kind was united with generosity it would excite affectionate gratitude, and a desire to make whatever return was possible, and in an honorable mind this is alway the result. But, unfortunately, there are others of a different mould, who, instead of being thus softened and inspired to do their best, become more and more exacting and demanding, and at the same time more dependent. We sometimes see this in the case of sickness and suffering. see this in the case of sickness and suffering. The strong and healthy husband or wife parent or child, eister or friend, feeling acute sympathy with the invalid, deems no sacrifice too great to make for his or her comfort or relief. All pleasure and recreation is given relief. All pleasure and recreation is given up, sleep is curtailed, every energy is taxed to the utmost, and sometimes health breaks down the strain; while the patient, instead of being gentle and grateful, and anxious to make as little trouble as possible, is fretful and peevish, complaining and thankless, accepting every sacrifice as a right, and continually making fresh demands. Many a generous and valuable life has been ruined and its health and happiness destroyed by this tyranny of selfish weakness over unselfish strength. health and happiness destroyed by this tyranny of selfish weakness over unselfish strength.
Sometimes it is the aged and infirm who are thus tyrannical. The young should be taught, far more efficiently than they are now, to reverence the old: yet it is, after all, only character, not years, that can command the reverence of the heart. He who uses his age as an excuse to cover idleness, petulance, and unreasonable demands, who is willing to som the strength waist the energies and spoil and unreasonable demands, who is whing to sap the strength, waist the energies and spoil the enjoyment of those who minister to his needs, is a fit example of the tyranny of weak-ness. Then there is the occasional tyranny of the poor and unfortunate over the generous and magnanimous. While many receive aid as a grateful but temporary help to a better condi-tion, and profit by it to renewed self-effort, there are some whom it seems to paralyze. They sink into a state of depen-paralyze. They sink into a state of dependence, accepting all and craving more, and draining the purses of the liberal to support their worthless lives. Not only poverty, but affliction of every kind may be tyrannical. Sympathy is sweet, and should be freely given, but when it is demanded it looses all its value. The unhappy have no right to thrust their misery upon others, to embitter their cup with the drops of grief which iall to their own share. That suffering alone is hallowed which, is borne with fortitude and not allowed to intrude itself upon any one or to poison any joy. There is, too, the tyranny of moral weakness over moral strength. A single ill-humored person may spoil the harof moral weakness over moral strength. A single ill-humored person may spoil the harmony and peace of an entire household, or the pleasure and comfort of a whole social circle. An envious, jealous or suspicious lover or friend is always a tyrant. His friend is in constant fear of exciting these evil passions, and must finally sacrifice either his friendship or his freedom. So the youth who swerves from integrity, who is too weak to resist temptation, inflicts untold suffering on his honest parents, and, perchance, on many others. The wrong-doer of every kind is constantly tyrannizing over the good man stantly tyrannizing over the good man interfering with his peace diminishing hi. liberty, curtailing his enjoyment. There are few greater tyrants than what are commonly called spoiled children. The parents, how-ever superior they may be in many respects, are their very slaves. They have sacrificed are their very slaves. They have sacrificed everything for them, and required no sacrifice at their hands in return. Thus the children expect to receive everything and to give nothing. The habit of selfishness becomes ingrained, and while they develop no power of making others happy, they lose the power of enjoyment in themselves. The parents' lives and happiness, and the children's also, are alike wrecked on the altar of foolish indulgence, while wisdom might have cherished gence, while wisdom might have cherished both. Mr. Arthur Helps says truly: "Weak is a relative term: whenever two people meet one is comparatively weak and the other strong." He is in a state of indignation, and says that it will be a calamity to the State to have Ryker removed at this time, and that he will not serve as director if he is so removed. Dr. Craighill has shown his influence with the move to establish this State service and he is naturally disgusted at the likelihood of a change just as the matter has reached consummation. Last evening while a party of six gentlemen were ascending the steep hill to "Rock Hill," the residence of Mr. B. C. Mr. W. C. Payne was the most seriously hurt, sustaining a dislocation of the stroulder and an ugly cut in the leg. Mr. Clif. Rodgers was run over, the wheels passing over his arm and leg, bruising him considerably. Mr. James Perley's right hand was badly sprained. He was also cut and bruised about the face. Messra, William H. Wood and William Waddell were slightly hurt. The great wonder is that a more serious accident did not occur. In all probability the hack would have fallen into the deep and large fish-pond at the foot of the hill had it not been for the tree that demolished it. "He is a man of rare cultivation and of a marked fondness for history and belles lettres, and to these he gives himself up with the enthusiasm of the scholar who studies simply for the love of study. His two novels have been very creditable, and display besides their merit as fiction considerable historical research. Besides being a student he is a man of affairs. He made an admirable minister a few years ago, when he and his wife won the esteem of Queen Margherita. Altogether, his career is a most creditable one, and an example to others of his class who waste their lives in frivolous and frequently harmful pursuits.—Chicago Herald.

Harper's Weekly is publishing an important series of illustrations, representing the principal buildings of the Columbian Exposition at Chicago as they will appear in 1893. These illustrations are drawn from the architects' accepted designs, and there can be no question as to their accuracy. The number of the Weekly for May 6th contains views of the Administration Building, and the Agricultural weekly for May of the contains views of the Administration Building and the Agricultural Building, two of the most important edifices to be erected in connection with the Exposition. Views have already been published of the Electrical Building, the Mining Building, the Water Palace, the Queen Isabella Payilion and several other structures.

DUKE OF DURHAM ON THE DEAL

He Says the Tobacco Combine Will Absorb the Blackwell Company.

CASES IN THE UNITED STATES COURT.

Death of the Little Deserted Waif-Commencement Exercises of the University...

RALEIGH, N. C., June 2.—[Special.]—Mr. W. Duke, of the great Duke Cigarette Factory of Durham, and a prominent member of the American Tobacco Company, was in Raleigh to-day and in an interview stated positively that negotiations were now pending looking to the absorption of the Durham Blackwell Bull Tobacco Company by the American Tobacco Company.

He stated that as soon as the arrangements on foot could be perfected, which will probably be in a few days, the transaction will be publicly announced.

UNITED STATES COURT.

The United State District Court is now in session here and a number of important cases will come up at this term. There are several election cases, the most important of which is from New Hanover county in which nine citizens of Wilmington who were on the canvassing board in the election of 1889 are indicted for throwing out and not counting returns. The United State District Court is now in ses-returns.

The famous "green goods" cases from Johnston county will also come up at this term.

A sensation was created in the court-room this evening by the sudden attack of illness of a man named W. P. Alley, from Franklinton, who was on trial for using stamps that had been cancelled. He was on the witnesstand testifying in his own behalf and when the Judge announced that according to his own testimony the jury would be obliged to convict him he had a sudden attack and fell from the stand.

The little girl waif who was abandoned here by its mother last week, and who has been in charge of the police here ever since, was taken ill a few days ago and died this morning. It created a great interest here during its stay and there were scores of applications for it from persons desiring to adopt it.
